"Forest Hills is a nice place to live," said COJ president Titilayo Yasukawa. "But far too often Black concerns get overlooked or outright dismissed by other organizations. So we decided to create our own space that empowers its citizens to find solutions through political, civic and legislative engagement." The goals of COJ include educating residents about local government, community issues, legislative policy, and civic organizations, as well as local elections and candidates running in them. Bigger goals will tackle social justice, inequities in education, housing, public health, and more. They are currently seeking to fill the positions of secretary and treasurer on its board. "Our first objective is to build membership and to educate on the local political process," said COJ's vice president Gideon Zvulon. "We want to facilitate access to local government and encourage civic engagement, because it is at this level where critical resources for our community are distributed. We need to ensure that we have a seat at the table in those discussions." The upcoming local elections were a major topic during the inaugural meeting. "In order to affect change that would affect yourself, or your community starts at the local level," said Zvulon. "Our clear and initial choice is to get people involved locally. Secondly, educating people to know politicians who have the best interests at heart, instead of just the ones you know by name." 		preparations for the event. The occasion will take place on Sunday, May 30, in Remsen Park and pay tribute to all the men and woman who have died while in the U.S. military. Slated to go on for just over an hour, the event will be filled with music, speeches, and honors. This year, the ceremony will not only recognize fallen service members but will also honor the sacrifice of frontline workers. Members of the Forest Hills Volunteer Ambulance Corps will be honored at the event for their efforts in saving the local community from the COVID-19 pandemic. Michael Arcati is commander of Post 1424 and has been a major force in organizing this year's ceremony. He served in the navy for a combined total of eight years as both a prosecutor and defense counsel. Specializing in international, criminal, and tax law, he's been awarded the Bronze Star among other military accolades. It was his goal to extend Memorial Day to as many people as possible. "This event is not just for the veterans but for the community and the service that is central to how it functions." Arcati couldn't envision honoring sacrifice this year without paying homage those who grappled with the pandemic on behalf of Queens, especially those from the volunteer ambulance service. "Like a military they lined up side by side, and put their lives on the line without question," he said. "These people never asked for a dime, and they need to be recognized.
