But leading liturgy well is a learned art, informed by a sound understanding of ritual, and so I consider it crucial to teach future liturgical leaders for the sake of liturgies that are beautiful, truthful, and have the capacity to coax the assembly into deeper belief and a deeper life with Christ. I am equally passionate about helping students form a theology of religious many-ness that is a permanent fact of our world, and in thinking through the nature of Christian mission in such a world."• [H5] The Rev. James W. Farwell, Ph.D.
